

ABSTRACT

The present invention relates to a new type of module in which the floor of the module is integral with the ceiling placement upon the module below it. This invention also provides utilization of temperature top protection a module during shipment. This invention also relates to 5 a construction method where the stabilizing structure for the building including stairs and hallways constructed first, and the module are constructed therein.